
Subject: Re: Intel® C++ Compiler for Linux
Posted by Christopher Huhn on Wed, 30 Mar 2005 08:23:39 GMT
View Forum Message <> Reply to Message

If you take a look at <http://www.intel.com/software/products/noncom/faq.htm>, you'll find that a central installation at GSI will most probably not fall under this license:

Quote:

Q. I am engaged in research projects. Can I qualify to use the noncommercial product?

A. If you, as an individual, are receiving any form of compensation for the research project (i.e., you receive a salary, or funding, etc.) you do not qualify for a non-commercial license.

The "Academic License" seems to be more appropriate:

Quote:For degree-granting institutions of higher learning whose primary purpose is to provide education to the general public, e.g., college and university, and to faculty members, faculty of academic eligibility for these discounted prices.

Anyhow someone has to decide to actually buy the software (maybe the DV-Ausschuss?). The
